I think really it is impossible to defend the performance thus far of the corps with respect to management of the river. We understand they are under all kinds of cross-pressure. There are downstream States that have a different take on this. But look, I really do think this is fundamental. We go to the question I asked to begin with with respect to the Winters decision, the so-called Winters Doctrine, going back to a Supreme Court decision in 1908. I think that said very, very clearly that water rights are reserved along with rights to the land. Then, if I could follow up with Mr. Dunlop and General Grisoli, in the Arizona v. California decision, what is your understanding of what it said on the question of Indian water rights This is some...
