Excerpt: .Drop after drop, through many a bitter wound. Lu, Nuadu and the others rise and leave the hall. The sons of Turann remain gazing at each other in silent consternation. The vision changed, and I beheld the Boyne s fair banks by Rossnaree. There stood Turann, his daughter, and his sons, and thus they spake. Ethnai. Your doom is grievous, brothers: not more grievous Than was the deed; the punishment is just. Alas! I could not have believed it of you, Were ye not self-accused, that in your souls Caged horrors like to these lay quick for flight: And those dear hands that have so oft caressed Your Ethnai, were more fitted to achieve The murder acts of wrath. Brian. Oh! speak not thus, Sweet sister: heavy is our punishment; Add not thine anger s weight. Why we thus wrought We know not. Some...
