Excerpt: . . . wooded districts odd specimens are shot almost every year, but this appears to be generally in the winter season. It would be greatly to the advantage of forestry if species like the present were strictly protected by the land-owner. In the Ribble valley, for instance, the timber, especially larch, is suffering very seriously from the ravages of coleopterous larvae, an evil which will become greater every year, and one to which the Green Woodpecker would apply a very-efficacious remedy. Subfamily lyngin. de. Genus lynx. WRYNECK. lynx Torquilla. L. Once a common summer visitor, now almost extinct. Blackwall gives its dates of arrival and departure near Manchester between 1814 and 1828 as averaging respectively April 11 and September 9, but Mr. W. Pearson, writing of the valley between Underbarrow Scar and Cartmel Fell, says (Papers, and c, 1863) that in 1838 it appeared April 28th,...
