The lake is composed of a curious aggregation of bays. Its length is over thirty miles, and its width over four miles at its widest, with a shore line of over 200 miles. At some points its shores are beautifully undulating, while at others bold headlands stand forth in grand defiance. One may sail tor weeks about these bays--and one may become lost in this surprising combination. Numerous cottages have been erected for whilom summer guests; and palatial hotels offer elegant accomodations to the great traveling public. Those who desire quiet homes can be satisfied in the little village of Excelsior, or in the retired nooks about the lake, where the air is freighted with blossom odors. One...
