A mature consideration of all the facts developed by its inquiries has led the Commission to certain definite conclusions with respect, first, as to what should, in its opinion, be immediately done to correct the abuses, remove the difficulties, increase the revenue, and decrease the cost of second-class matter, and, second, as to what should be further done, in view of the lack of conclusive statistics as to the operating expenses of the Post-Office Department as affecting the various classes, toward such an investigation of the conduct and system of the postal service as will enable Congress eventually to place it upon a more businesslike basis. The Commission accordingly divides its treatment of the subject in this report into two parts: Part 1. Immediate legislation. Part 2. Further investigation. Part 1. --immediate Legislation. As was briefly suggested in the public announcement...
