In March, 1872, a communication was read by the President before the monthly meeting. In this communication from Rufus Ellis, Henry W. Foote, and Cyrus Bartol, the desire was expressed that the Massachusetts Horticultural Society offer prizes for window gardens, conduct all the business of advertising, awarding prizes, etc.; and whatever money was required would be furnished by the petitioners. The plan, offered to a body of florists and nursery-men, was deemed impracticable, and on submitting its acceptance for a vote, it was not enthusiastically adopted. A committee was appointed by the Chair. A suitable schedule was prepared and correspondence was held with the clergymen of Boston, presiding over Mission Sunday Schools. Plants were distributed at Easter by charitably disposed persons, and by the churches. The report of the Chairman in December of that year gave the names of those to whom were awarded small prizes (over one hundred children), and the pleasant news of a small sum of money in the treasury. The friends considered the seed well sown. Later years of great indifference in the Society caused them to consider it sown either in fallow ground or too deep to feel the kindly influence of warmth and encouragement. But the time for re-awakening came, just as spring...
