Mrs. Russell would have the bacon and plates put upon another table, with a loaf; and she kept Susan busy with these things till Leonard, who had been on the watch, came running in with his eyes as round as the tea-cups, saying in a loud, startling whisper, They are coming! they are coming! Every one in the cottage heard the whisper, and the eyes of all the children became as round as Leonard s. Who can describe the scene when the husband and wife met. and when Amwell took his children in his arms, and held them to his heart; and it would not be easy to describe his manner when he turned about and thanked the friends met in the cottage for all their kindnesses, unnumbered kindnesses, to his wife and children; nor did he forget to speak his gratitude to his heavenly Father, for having put it into the hearts of these strangers to be thus kind to his wife in her affliction. We cannot doubt but that he thought of his Annie, even in that happy hour; but in the very happiest hour in this life there must always be something wanting; we never can gather together all we love in this life. We shall have all we can desire...
